Aggie Muster

At A&M, You Are Never Forgotten

By Stephanie Jeter ’06
From the top row of Reed Arena, you can’t see faces. In the darkness, candles glow. And within the glow, the echo of a Ross Volunteer’s well-cadenced footstep is as profound as his rifle’s deafening volley.

For Thomas Conner ’08, as for most Aggies, the annual Muster date is a symbolic one—the lighting of a candle, the calling of a name, and the answer of “here.” He believes Muster is about stories, and that “everyone has a story.” He has one, too. Otherwise Conner would have gone home after his last semester exam. Instead, on the last day of the fall semester, he chose to sit across a table in the Clayton W. Williams, Jr. Alumni Center to patiently explain Muster’s purpose.

“You gather together, eat a little and live over the days spent at A&M,” he said with obvious passion. He uses his hands when he talks, and as chair of this year’s campus Muster, he’s used those hands to further his favorite tradition. There are many reasons for Conner’s passion for Muster, he said. But they mostly center on the fact that, “at Texas A&M, you’re never forgotten.”

“When we come together, we remember what it means to be an Aggie. It’s celebrating lives and dedicating yourself—if just for the day—to not forget their stories.”

The history he celebrates lives on in timelines and books. On the archived shelves at Texas A&M’s Cushing Memorial Library, there are four walls of the past, but there was a time when the stories were as real as a soldier’s next breath.

Photos give the stories faces, and pages of handwritten scrawl tell their name, rank, class and address.

MUSTERING TO REMEMBER
Capt. Raymond R. Dennis ’44 of Fort Des Moines, Iowa, wrote his name in all caps.

Huntsville man 1st Lt. Ralph L. Riv ’43 scribbled his with a slight slant. Pfc. Frank M. Lloyd ’48 and Maj. J.D. Hancock ’40 left their mark in ink. There were Rays, Charlies, Joes and Williams and hometowns in Dallas, Alto, Tulia and Paris. But, since deploying with the U.S. military, all were gathered that April 1946 in Bad Homburg, Germany, for Muster.

It’s the details that bring their stories alive. Before the start of the ceremony, someone ran the sign-in sheet through a typewriter and headed the page: “Dedicated to A&M men killed in WWII.”

Many had been killed. Only four years earlier, another annual Muster got the national spotlight for a similar reason.

MUSTER AT CORREGIDOR
It was April 1942, and World War II had the nation in a chokehold. In the fight against Japan, the small island of Corregidor in Manila Bay was the last of America’s strongholds in the area. First-hand accounts published in the book “Softly Call the Muster” by John A. Adams, Jr. ’73 tell how America’s war strategy in the Pacific depended on the strength of Manila Bay—and how Texas Aggie Brig. Gen. George F. Moore, Class of 1908, was one of the soldiers commissioned to defend it.

As the small island continued to be pummeled by artillery shells from Japanese planes, the only safe spot for American soldiers was the bombproof Malinta Tunnel. The 830-foot by 35-foot passageway—used as headquarters, supply depot and makeshift hospital—became the spot of Aggie legend.

It was April 21, San Jacinto Day, Moore realized. Adams’s book said Moore asked another Aggie, Maj. Tom Dooley ’35, if they could get a list of the Aggies fighting at Corregidor. There were 24 of them.

“So, we had a roll call, and a muster is a roll call,” Dooley was quoted as saying. He sent word to one of the news correspondents reporting from the island, and the reporter wired the story back to the states.

Sometimes in tradition, truth and legend land so close together, a historian can get whiplash. And somewhere along the newswire, the tale of Aggie Muster at Corregidor grew wings, said University Archivist David Chapman ’67.

The Houston Post ran the headline, “Aggies Fete San Jacinto—35 Texans bear down on Famed Fight Song.” Microfilm of the front page is still on file in the archives.

“WASHINGTON, April 21—From the sun-drenched slopes of San Jacinto to battered Corregidor is half way across the earth, but Texas fighting spirit that has lived since 1836 bridged those long, long miles Tuesday.”

The story said the group gathered in the tunnel and “sang Texas songs.” Another newspaper picked up on
Their story read: Corregidor’s “wireless is used sparingly, so there were few details, but any Texan can visualize that little band of Aggies roaring and singing their defiance” of Japan’s big guns and bombers.

Impossible, said Chapman.

The story is debunked by Dooley’s account, too.

America needed good news, and if the news reports took readers by the hand and gave them what they wanted, the truth would have taken them by the throats. It was war, Chapman said. Artillery shells rained from the sky; there was no way the Aggies would have physically gathered together, he said.

AN EXTENSION OF TRADITION

As a historian, Chapman calls no foul. The story, he explained, gave hope to a nation and helped cement the genuine celebration Muster triggers now. It gave Muster an international standing. This year there will be more than 325 Musters held around the world.

Every Muster is different, but every Muster is the same. While Texas A&M’s campus Muster is solemn and silent, others are meant for discussion. Both styles fill the bill. Musters are held in backyards or community centers, restaurants and churches. Some host hundreds while others draw only a handful.

Raul B. Fernandez ’59, a 2007 Distinguished Alumnus, has spoken at more than 20 Muster ceremonies. For more than a decade, he has packed his overnight bag with the essentials and his Aggie story.

“It’s like throwing a rock in a lake and seeing those circles going out and out,” he said. “You always find a connection. I’ve been to Laredo, Corpus Christi, Alice, Queenie, El Salvador and a whole bunch of other places,” he said. But in his crisscross around the world, he said, small Musters are his favorite.

The Southwest Louisiana A&M Club’s Muster is one of those small celebrations. Hosted at a ranch, about 30-35 people come every year, said Grant Bush ’01, the Club’s Muster chair. They have barbeque, get together, talk about A&M memories and remember the Aggies they lost the previous year.

“Different people come, most of them I don’t even know. But it doesn’t matter. That’s what Muster is about,” he said.

And for him, it’s a source of pride, along with a celebration of the past.

“No other university even comes close to doing this type of tradition,” Bush said. “Some may have other recognitions, but nothing like Muster.”
